DID YOU KNOW...?

95%

of all the animal species on the earth are invertebrates

There are around 24,000
species of insects in the UK

10%

of the animal biomass of the world is made up of ants

Globally, about $\frac{1}{3}$
of food production relies on pollinating insects

The Royal Entomological Society

Who are we?

The Royal Entomological Society (RES) plays a major national and international role in disseminating information about the insect world and improving communication between entomologists. The development of insect science is essential if we are to protect our natural heritage and to understand how environmental problems, including climate change, influence the natural world.

What do we do?

Informing, involving, inspiring.

The RES supports insect science through our renowned scientific journals and other publications, our meetings and by providing a forum for disseminating research findings. Our quarterly magazine 'Antenna' provides members with information about upcoming meetings, a diary of events and the latest research undertaken by our Members and Fellows.

National Insect Week

National Insect Week (NIW) is an initiative organised by the RES which aims to educate and inspire people of all ages about the wonders of the insect world.

NIW takes place every two years and is the Society's most high profile event. In 2006 almost 200 insect events took place throughout the country, and the initiative received the support of organisations including the Environment Agency, the Department for Education and Skills, the Forestry Commission and the Scout Association.

Visit www.nationalinsectweek.co.uk for more information.

Why is becoming a Corporate Member so important?

Corporate membership of the Royal Entomological Society is a great way for your company to demonstrate to its staff, suppliers and customers that you care about the environment and the future of our invertebrates.

Your support will mean the Society can continue its work of bringing the wonderful world of insects to a wide audience through its exciting events and initiatives.
