➤ EVENT DETAILS

The Royal Entomological Society has expanded its former Aphid Special Interest Group to cover all hemipterans and has joined forces with the with the Aphid Research Network BAPOA of the SPE (Plant Health and Environment) Department at INRAE, and the French National Research Institute for Agriculture, Food and Environment to host this event.

We come together as researchers working across hemipterans to understand commonalities and differences across this diverse order of insects with the aim to further interdisciplinary collaboration in hemipteran research and practice.

The event will be one of the most significant co-hosted research conferences for our 2,400+ membership community to date.

➤ RES

The Royal Entomological Society (RES) is a global charity devoted to the understanding and development of insect science. They support international collaboration, research and publication and aim to show every person how remarkable and valuable insects are!
